The display available at LEGOLAND California Resort is made up of over 300,000 bricks that are divided into three layers. Notice that on the left there is a block for the star and number and on the right we see a layer of blocks representing the square. It is a fully interactive display, which means that you can see what LEGO designers see. But apparently the final edition will become more three-dimensional. You can view the complete 360-degree video of the display by clicking on the video below. As you can notice, LEGO designers have added a few of their own elements to make the design work. They have placed additional elements inside the display and have taken it one step further by making the display for the eyes of the future: robots and other vehicles are present, making it
