The race is sponsored by the Muscle Shoals Area Chamber of Commerce and one of its community partners, Alabama Bowl. James Langdon Runners from all over the country gathered at the Muscle Shoals Civic Center on Saturday to spin the first ever race for 5,000 people in the 27-year history of Alabama Bowl, a major community recreation and entertainment center on the banks of the Tennessee River. "This is the start of a big expansion for the community and a way for people to share our riverfront," said Robert Foster, president of the Muscle Shoals Area Chamber of Commerce. "We worked on this a long time. We felt it would be a perfect fit for our community and we think it will continue to grow." Runners who pay $5 to join the race have the option of wearing either red or blue, a marketing strategy that drew a crowd. The day's festivities opened with morning worship at the Civic Center and wrapped up with a party and fellowship at the center's soccer fields and surrounding area. The 5K event featured live music, food trucks, a village and all proceeds from the event will benefit the chamber's community partners. "They're all coming to an Alabama Bowl," said Dan Fry, event coordinator. "They're all here because of us." Among the more than 50 runners who attended were many from the Birmingham area. "I've been to Muscle Shoals before in the past," said Monique Jackson, a Birmingham runner. "It's really an amazing place. It's so quiet with the river. I really like it. I like to run." "It was kind of crazy," said Annie Goss, a runner from Columbia, S.C. "It was a bit different, but it was pretty exciting." Muscle Shoals Mayor Frank Presnell and Foster were among the crowd that watched the race. "The turnout was awesome," Foster said. "It's fun to see the event and the people get excited about it. There's been a lot of work that has gone into making it happen.
