Intelligent Player Motion The most significant gameplay change is the introduction of Intelligent Player Motion, which features refined pace and acceleration, sharp turns and realistic 'off-ball' action. The new system also has a deeper understanding of off-ball positioning, and the ability to control the direction of movement, pace and acceleration of players in order to better simulate the choices players make. A match engine has also been developed, which allows for more depth and intelligence, with more ways to produce matches with more than 10,000 possible outcomes. The new match engine uses a randomization function to provide unforeseeable situations, such as aerial duels, that occur throughout gameplay. This means the AI cannot always be optimized for the best outcome. AI-controlled players must react in real-time to unpredictable situations during the match.

More 'Dribbling' The new dribbling system provides a more realistic and varied feel. Players can choose to take touches with both feet or with just one - or even more. Players can also control when and how they use the D-Pad in order to create realistic ball skills and dribbling combinations. Real-life dribbling sequences can now be performed with ease, with over 40 dribbling actions on the pitch, including 360-degree spins and pirouettes. The new system also allows players to pass to a close rival, using intelligent vision-based skills, via the new "vision tool" feature.

"Algorithms" that Emulate Real-Life The new AI team capabilities have been integrated into a game engine that has developed exponentially in power over recent years. It is now equipped with so-called "algorithms" that emulate the real-life behaviors of players. The data and data-driven elements of the game is now very different to FIFA 16, including player control algorithms, smaller passes to lesser-known midfielders, and tighter, more realistic off-the-ball movement.

Real-Time Referee Communication In FIFA, teams make decisions in real-time based on information that's available to their players. The new match engine uses this same real-time information to make thousands of decisions per second. For example, a team might pass to a specific player on the other side of the pitch as a way to make a decision to win a ball, and tell his teammates about it without delay. This means a player can see his teammates moving toward the ball,
